A series of homogeneous Fe(III) complexes was recently reported that are active for electrocatalytic hydrogen generation. The next step toward assembling a device for Artificial Photosynthesis involves immobilizing these active catalysts onto semiconductor supports. This seminar will focus on our efforts to develop highly active and robust heterogeneous systems for hydrogen generation that are inspired by active homogeneous catalysts discovered in our lab.